THE COMMITAL (AT GRAVESIDE)

The Lord's Prayer

The Loss of a Father

By Donna Ashworth

Is the anchor pulled from the seabed
The steering wheel unhinged
The mast split by lightning
And the bow broken by the storm

The ship you sail, now feels unsafe
No longer weatherproof
Without direction, or brave heart
To speed its way

Perhaps you did not even know
That he was your compass
That you gazed upon his lead
Like a north-star in the night

He gave you all of this you see
Without notice or congratulation
Diligently, consistently
Continuously guiding
Always showing the way
In the way he knew how

And whilst you are cast adrift
I know this to be true
You will anchor yourself once more
When you realise
That his voice still speaks, still guides
Still brings a brave heart your way
In the roughest of storms.

And the answers you seek
He already planted deep
For he knew one day
You would need to sail alone

So he buried little pieces of himself within your heart
Your mind, your spirit and your soul
Little breadcrumbs of love
To show the way home.

Appreciation

Suzanne would like to thank people for all the cards & messages she received in the weeks after her dad's passing & for everyone's kind support during this time.
