Hymn

10,000 Reasons

Bless the Lord oh my soul
Oh my soul
Worship His Holy name
Sing like never before
Oh my soul
I'll worship Your Holy name

The sun comes up
It's a new day dawning
It's time to sing Your song again
Whatever may pass
And whatever lies before me
Let me be singing
When the evening comes

Bless the Lord oh my soul
Oh my soul
Worship His Holy name
Sing like never before
Oh my soul
I'll worship Your Holy name

The Bride and Groom

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased from 10.5 to 13.5 million (19.5% of the population).

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has grown so rapidly. One of the main reasons is the increasing demand for public services, particularly in the areas of health care and education. Another reason is the increasing number of people who are retired and therefore dependent on the state for their income.

The growth of the public sector has led to a number of problems, including a large budget deficit and a high level of public debt.

There are a number of ways in which the public sector could be reformed, including privatisation and the introduction of market competition.

Privatisation is the process of transferring ownership of a public asset or service to the private sector.

The introduction of market competition is the process of allowing private firms to compete for public contracts.

There are a number of arguments in favour of privatisation and the introduction of market competition.

One of the main arguments is that privatisation and the introduction of market competition will lead to a more efficient public sector.

Another argument is that privatisation and the introduction of market competition will lead to a reduction in the size of the public sector.

There are also a number of arguments against privatisation and the introduction of market competition.

One of the main arguments is that privatisation and the introduction of market competition will lead to a loss of public control over the public sector.

Another argument is that privatisation and the introduction of market competition will lead to a reduction in the quality of public services.

There are also a number of arguments in favour of maintaining the public sector.

One of the main arguments is that the public sector provides a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.

Another argument is that the public sector provides a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.

There are also a number of arguments in favour of a mixed economy.

One of the main arguments is that a mixed economy would allow the public sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.

Another argument is that a mixed economy would allow the public sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.

There are also a number of arguments in favour of a free market economy.

One of the main arguments is that a free market economy would allow the private sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the public sector.

Another argument is that a free market economy would allow the private sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the public sector.

There are also a number of arguments in favour of a social market economy.

One of the main arguments is that a social market economy would allow the public sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.

Another argument is that a social market economy would allow the public sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.

There are also a number of arguments in favour of a welfare state.

One of the main arguments is that a welfare state would allow the public sector to provide a number of important public services that would be difficult to provide in the private sector.
