POEM

Resting Place

You wondered the world with a restless heart,
Each city a page, each journey a start.

From quiet lanes to bustling streets,
Chasing the winds where adventure meets.

Your feet never stayed, your soul never still.
But time, like a whisper, beckoned you near,

And the road grew soft as the end drew clear.

Now you lie where the earth is at peace,
In the stillness of dusk, where all journeys cease.

No more the flight, no more the roam -
You've found your resting place, finally home.

A LONG CUP OF TEA

A poem written by Mark Ashby

Death is too negative for me
So I'll be popping off for a long cup of tea
Do splash out on two bags in the pot
And for gods sake keep the water hot
Please pick the biggest mug you can find
Size really does matter at this time
I'll pass on the lapsang with that souchong
And that stuff with the bergamot
And stick with my favourite friend
You know the English breakfast blend
Breakfast! thanks for reminding me
There's just time before I fail
To stand on ceremony
Two rashers of the best back, Should keep me
Smelling sweet up the smokestack
So, mother, put the kettle on for me
It's time mother, for my long cup of tea
