A poem about Blarney Castle, a favourite of Charles'.....

I walk the path amid the trees,
Where footsteps of the past have tread,
Where ancient stones of Blarney please,
Where lips upon the stone are wed.

My roots...

GOODNIGHT'....

He loved his scooters, a weekend ride-out, a bloody good party, five drinks on the go.

He worked his socks off; the building site his happy place, where he thrived!

With the Irish blood running through and through, he'll no doubt be up there flying high.

Can of lager, cup of tea, two sugars, strumming on his guitar,

Be free, with all the Fitzy's, forever in our hearts.

You'll be sorely missed.

& GOD BLESS x

A drink at the pub, it'd be rude not to!

Let's celebrate with a pint of the 'black stuff'.....
