Footprints A Reply

Read by Celebrant
Written with love by Ian

*The footprints we leave behind are of a deep or shallow kind
Mine are barely visible being washed by a relentless tide
The rock I once was had been battered over time Leaving nothing but grains and fine dust but nothing to remind Endless battles fought blind, when the only aim is simply to survive
I tried to leave an imprint deep, as deep as you would find
But the relentlessness of battle leaves little to remind
When the rock has finally crumbled and then there's nothing left to see*

*I wonder what was left to remind you of me
Would you remember a love that lasts eternity
Or would you think only of the rock I used to be.*
