Jayne Millicent Smith - Her Service of Celebration

WELCOME & INTRODUCTION

Poem

*But you've come to the end of your journey Jayne
And travelled your last weary mile
We're going to forget that you ever frowned
And remember only your smile*

*We'll forget unkind words you have spoken
And remember the good I have done
We'll forget that you ever had heartache
And remember you've had loads of fun*

*We'll remember how many people loved you
Just read the messages all over Facebook
We'll laugh at the language you've uttered
And that colourful usage of....Fuck.*

*And we will try to not grieve for your going
You would not have us sad for a day
But in summer we'll gather some flowers
And remember the place where you lay*

*And come in the shade of evening
When the sun paints the sky in the west
We'll stand for a few moments beside me
And remember only your best*

Poem

*A loving wife, mum and nanny too,
This is the legacy we have from you*

*You taught them to love and how to fight
You gave them strength, you gave us might.*

*A stronger woman would be hard to find,
And in your heart you were always kind.*

*With fists and words you fought for so many
But your golden heart found a man called Kenny*

*For all of them you gave your best
And now the time has come for you to rest.*

*So go in peace Jayne, you've earned your sleep,
Your love in our hearts we'll eternally keep.*
