I'm forty-seven and I still have a wife
Most of our friends, have all married twice
But I don't see her, for she studies nights
While I watch tv, and make my model bikes
And certain women make me come alive
I've got this funny kind of hunger inside

I'm fifty-seven and it's a funny life
I thought that I knew all about my wife
But last October when our girl was wed
And we were talking about the day in bed
She kissed my hands, and stroked my head
And told me every day had been a gift

I'm sixty-seven and I miss my wife
I never knew how much I loved her until last night
When she came to me in a dream so light
With her skin so smooth and her lips so bright
And she kissed me like it was our wedding night

Oh bless that night

Thank you!

- To all our dearest friends & family joining us in celebrating this special day.

Today symbolises our love for one another, but also brings together our beautiful families from opposite sides of the globe.

Having you here with us makes this day even more special.

With love,

Sarah & Robi
